Know your limitations Any manipulation of an image within Photoshop uses the same range of techniques and features as every other program in the industry. You won't find many tools, with the exception of Photoshop itself, that work in nearly the same way as in Photoshop. Photoshop gives you a lot of capability, but it also gives you a lot of flexibility. When you're working on an image in Photoshop, you're working within the confines of the program. The program is not the answer to your problems, and you may not be able to do everything you need to do to complete a project. You shouldn't be lured into thinking that you can work within Photoshop and then drag and drop the image to a different image-editing program to get the effect you want. You need to understand Photoshop's own limitations, and stick with what the program does best. Don't be fooled by all of the new features in Photoshop CS5.

Many of the features that you see touted in the hype are the same features that have been available in earlier versions. In fact, Photoshop CS5 is more of a refinement of functionality than a brand-new feature-addition program.

Hand tools are the most versatile of Photoshop's toolset, and they can be used to make basic art. They also are used to create images with organic shapes and details that can then be edited with raster or vector tools. The Pen tool, discussed next, is a particularly useful hand tool.

What's New in the?

Wednesday, May 25, 2006 just two more... I've got two more and then I'm finished. Not the most exciting giveaway, but hey, that's a good excuse to tell you about how I have no more projects to share. And I will tell you that I've finished at least one... I finished my third pair of plain knit stockings! I have another four to go before I have my full set ready to wear. I'm going to post an update on here in the next few days about how the other four pair went, but I have to wait for them to dry first. I'm so proud of myself and while it's not my most exciting giveaway, I'm very happy with myself and my knitting skills. Oh, and everytime I knit, I take a picture. So far, I've taken about 30 pictures. I have too many to upload and show, but I will get around to that in the next week or so. Then I'll start to upload the pictures of the finished things. I also have a question for the blog readers. I know the header on my sidebar is the links to other blogs, but you may not be able to link to me, but what should the header on the sidebar be? Right now, it's a picture of my cat. I don't want that anymore, but I have no idea what should go in its place. (BTW, this is the layout that I wanted to use for this blog, but it didn't work. I really don't know why. I wanted to keep it as simple as possible. Oh, well.) Hi, I am looking forward to the update. Where in the world are you located? It's not like you live in a different country. Kind of like the Big Bounce Back, finishing your first pair of Stockings, I love your blog, you have been a wonderful inspiration to me! I love knitting, but my skills are very limited, we don't have access to Yarn Harlot, the various knitting groups I have read/looked into have very large groups, and I have trouble getting out in the city more than once per year. Our local yarn store is great, but they have very limited knitting supplies and I have only ever bought yarn there. I think the header should stay the same, if you could even keep the picture of the cat, for your natural beauty and charm that it represents. I have a lovely
